17th August 2018 | by Aoife Bradley

Summary of legislative developments

One of the key developments in this issue of our employment law legislative update is the Data Protection Act 2018 (DPA), which gives further effect in Ireland to the General Data Protection Regulation (EU) 2016/679, the GDPR. The DPA also transposes the Law Enforcement Directive, (EU) 2016/680, into Irish law and establishes the Data Protection Commission, replacing the Data Protection Commissioner, as the national supervisory authority for data protection.

We also review a number of new or updated bills and statutory instruments with implications for employment law, including:

- Recent developments in relation to the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill 2017.
- The Parental Leave (Amendment) Bill 2017 and the Shared Maternity Leave and Benefit Bill 2018, which respectively propose amendments to the period of parental leave and a new entitlement to shared maternity leave and benefit.
- New regulations dealing with personal protective equipment requirements and also the Irish implementation of certain provisions of the Trade Secrets Directive.

We look forward to hearing any comments or questions you may have in relation to the contents of this update.

ACTS

Data Protection Act 2018

The GDPR allows EU Member States, by national law or by collective agreements, to provide more specific rules in respect of employers' processing of employee personal data, in particular for the purposes of: (i) recruitment; (ii) performance of the contract of employment; (iii) management, planning and organisation of work; (iv) equality and diversity in the workplace; (v) health and safety at work; (vi) protection of employers' or customers' property; (vii) the exercise and enjoyment of rights and benefits related to employment; and (viii) termination of the employment relationship.

Below are some key points from the DPA, which Irish HR specialists should be aware of.

Suitable and specific measures

The GDPR provides that where an EU Member State provides 'more specific rules' (as described above) the rules must include 'suitable and specific measures' to safeguard the employees' human dignity, legitimate interests and fundamental rights.

Section 36 of the DPA provides a non-exhaustive list of 'suitable and specific measures' to be considered when the DPA or any Irish regulations made under the DPA, require 'suitable and specific measures' be taken in respect of a processing activity. These include: (i) obtaining data subject explicit consent for the processing; (ii) implementing data access restrictions; (iii) strict time limits for erasure of personal data and mechanisms to ensure time limits are observed; (iv) targeted staff training; and (v) technical measures such as pseudonymisation and encryption of personal

Special categories of personal data

The Section 36 framework for 'suitable and specific measures' is relevant to Irish employers where it is necessary to process 'special categories of personal data' concerning their employees (e.g. personal data revealing racial or ethnic origin, religious or philosophical beliefs, trade union membership, or health related personal data).

The processing of special categories of personal data is generally prohibited under the GDPR. However, there are certain exemptions and the DPA provides that, subject to Section 36 'suitable and specific measures' being taken, the processing of special categories of personal data is lawful if:

- Section 46: The processing is necessary for the purposes of exercising or performing any right or obligation which is conferred or imposed by law on the controller (e.g. employer) or the data subject (e.g. employee) in connection with employment or social welfare law;
- Section 50(c): In respect of health related data only, the processing is necessary and proportionate for an occupational pension, retirement annuity contract or any other pension arrangement;
- Section 52(1)(b): The processing is necessary for the assessment of the working capacity of an employee, and where it is undertaken by or under the responsibility of a health practitioner, or a person who owes a duty of confidentiality to the data subject equivalent to that of a health practitioner.

Personal data regarding criminal convictions and offences

Prior to the GDPR, personal data relating to 'the commission or alleged commission of any offence by the data subject' was categorised as sensitive personal data.

This type of personal data is not categorised as a special category of personal data under the GDPR. However, Article 10 of the GDPR provides that any processing of this type of personal data can only be carried out under the control of an official authority or when the processing is authorised by EU or Member State law providing for appropriate safeguards for the rights and freedoms of data subjects.

Further to this, Section 55(b) of the DPA provides circumstances where an Irish employer may be able to process personal data regarding an employee's criminal convictions and offences (including any alleged commission of an offence and any proceedings in relation to same). However, doing so must be: (i) without prejudice to the Criminal Justice (Spent Convictions and Certain Disclosures) Act 2016; (ii) subject to the employer having a lawful processing basis under Article 6(1) of the GDPR; and (iii) subject to Section 36 'suitable and specific measures' being taken.

Limiting the Rights of Data Subjects

Article 23 of the GDPR permits Member States to restrict the exercise of data subjects' rights, including the right of access, where the restriction respects fundamental rights and freedoms and is a necessary and proportionate measure in a democratic society to safeguard important objectives of general public interest.

Section 60 of the DPA sets out a number of circumstances where data subjects' rights and controllers' obligations are restricted, to the extent necessary and proportionate.

Legal privilege exceptions continue, and so data subjects' rights and controllers' obligations in respect of certain Articles of the GDPR (including the right of access) do not apply to personal data: (i) processed for the purpose of seeking, receiving or giving legal advice; (ii) in respect of which a claim of privilege could be made for the purpose of or in the course of legal proceedings, including personal data consisting of communications between a client and his or her legal advisers or between those advisers; or (iii) where the exercise of such rights or performance of such obligations would constitute a contempt of court.

Enforced Subject Access Requests

As under the Data Protection Acts 1988 and 2003, the DPA continues to prohibit the practice known as 'enforced subject access requests', whereby an employer requires an employee or prospective employee to make a data subject access request under Article 15 GDPR, or to provide to the employer the data related to that employee or prospective employee obtained on foot of that request.

Health (General Practitioner Service) Act 2018

This Act amends the Health Act 1970 to allow for the Health Service Executive to provide without charge general practitioner medical and surgical service for individuals in receipt of carer's benefit or carer's allowance.

BILLS

Industrial Relations (Collective Action) Bill 2018

The purpose of this private members' bill is to remove the requirement that all agreed procedures be resorted to and exhausted before collective industrial action can be manifested, as provided for in the Industrial Relations Act 1990.

The Industrial Relations Act 1990 provides that where in relation to the employment or non-employment, or the terms or conditions of or affecting the employment of one individual worker, there are agreed procedures availed of by custom or in practice in the employment concerned, or provided for in a collective agreement, for the resolution of individual grievances, including dismissals, then specified collective industrial action only applies where those procedures have been resorted to. The Bill proposes the deletion of these provisions.

Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill 2017

We reviewed the initial version of this Bill in our December 2017 issue. The Bill has now gone through all stages in the Dail: some amendments and additional provisions were introduced during that process, which are discussed below. The Bill may also be subject to further changes in the Seanad.

Unfair Dismissals

It is proposed that section 8 of the Unfair Dismissals Act 1977 will adopt a new subsection expanding the powers of the adjudication officer within the Workplace Relations Commission. An adjudication officer can now, by giving notice, require a person to give evidence in proceedings or to provide the adjudication officer with any documents in his or her possession, custody, or control that relate to the matters at hand. A person who is served such notice will be entitled to the same immunities and privileges as a witness in High Court proceedings. Failure or refusal to comply with such a notice, refusal to provide evidence in proceedings, or failure to produce related documents will render the party guilty of an offence and liable to a fine not exceeding €500.

Anti-Penalisation

The proposed amendment to the Terms of Employment (Information) Act 1994 to protect against penalisation remains largely unchanged, except for the addition of a new subsection 6C(6), which provides that where in penalisation proceedings facts are established by or on behalf of a complainant from which it may be presumed that this section has been contravened, the onus is on the respondent to prove the contrary.

Further protection against penalisation is proposed in the Organisation of Working Time Act 1997 with an amended version of section 26. This section provides that penalisation will be said to have occurred should the hours of work of an employee who had made a complaint under the Workplace Relations Act 2015 (in relation to banded hours) be reduced, unless this reduction can be justified by an objective and unrelated factor. The onus will be on the employer to show that such justification exists.

Banded Hours

The new concept of 'banded hours' to be inserted into the Organisation of Working Time Act 1997 has been slightly amended since the first version of the Bill, with the addition of a subsection which determines that in the event of hours becoming available, an employer must offer these surplus hours to existing part-time employees first.

The table setting out the bands of weekly hours has also been amended from just four bands to the following:

Minimum Wage Band	From	To
A The Bill seeks to amend the National Minimum Wage Act 2000 in relation to employees who are under the age of twenty and to also repeal the section in respect of trainee rates.	3 hours or more	less than 6 hours
B The Bill proposes that the Minister will now prescribe a percentage of the national minimum hourly rate of pay for employees:	6 hours or more	less than 11 hours
C	11 hours or more	less than 16 hours
D 1. Who have not attained the age of 18 years, 2. Who are 18 years of age, and	16 hours or more	less than 21 hours
E 3. Who are 19 years of age.	21 hours or more	less than 26 hours
F These employees will be paid for their working hours in a pay reference period at an hourly rate that is, on average, no less than the percentage of the national minimum hourly rate of pay prescribed by the Minister. The Minister must	26 hours or more	less than 31 hours
G have regard to the condition of the labour market, the costs of employment, and the levels of youth employment and unemployment.	31 hours or more	less than 36 hours
H In prescribing the percentages, the Minister shall not prescribe a percentage of the national minimum hourly rate of	36 hours and over pay that is:

1. less than 70 per cent for employees who have not attained the age of 18 years,

2. less than 80 per cent for employees who are 18 years of age,
3. less than 90 per cent for employees who are 19 years of age.

The most recent amendment to this Bill is the insertion of section 20, which proposes to make it an offence for an employer to incorrectly designate an employee as self-employed. A person found guilty of such offence would be liable on summary conviction to a fine of up to €5,000 and/or up to 12 months' imprisonment. The Bill proposes that summary proceedings under this section may be brought and prosecuted by the Workplace Relations Commission. It shall be a defence for the accused employer to prove that they (or any person under their control) exercised due diligence and took reasonable precautions to ensure that the designation was correct. The proposed section 20 provides that an employee is a person who, in performing his or her duties, does so as a person not in business on their own account and who is not a free agent or economically independent of the person engaging his or her service. It further sets out a number of factors which would indicate that an individual is an employee. The Minister for Employment Affairs and Social Protection has expressed her disappointment with the introduction of this particular amendment at such a late stage due to the delay it will cause to the Bill completing its passage through the Oireachtas.

Parental Leave (Amendment) Bill 2017

This private members' bill proposes to increase the current entitlement to parental leave from a period of 18 weeks to 26 weeks and would increase the qualifying age of the child from 8 to 12 years of age. Employees with a qualifying child who had already taken the 18 weeks' leave would be entitled to the additional 8 weeks' leave also.

Gambling Control Bill 2018

This private members' bill includes safeguards preventing licence holders from employing a young person (i.e. individuals who are less than 18 years old) in connection with the delivery of licensed services. Employment in this case includes paid and unpaid placements and both part-time and occasional employment. It refers to any position at a place used to provide or support the delivery of the gambling service, where the position involves any level of involvement in the delivery of the service. A licence holder who employs a person in a premises where a gambling service is available, is being provided from or is accessible will be guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine of up to €5,000 and/or 6 months' imprisonment.

Industrial Relations (Amendment) Bill 2018

This Bill amends the Industrial Relations Act 1990 to provide that certain provisions of the 1990 Act will now apply to certain members of An Garda Síochána, namely all members of An Garda Síochána excluding the Garda Commissioner and members of the reserve forces. If enacted, the Industrial Relations (Amendment) Act 2018 would provide Garda Representative Associations and members of An Garda Síochána with access to the services of the Workplace Relations Commission and the Labour Court in the event of industrial relations disputes involving members arising.

Shared Maternity Leave and Benefit Bill 2018

This private members' bill proposes that a pregnant employee may opt to share her entitlement to 26 consecutive weeks of maternity leave with a 'relevant parent' (i.e. a person who is the father of the child, the pregnant employee's spouse, civil partner or cohabitant or the other parent of the child where the child is a donor conceived child). This will not affect the other parent's right to paternity leave. Such leave taken by the other parent will be referred to as "shared leave". The relevant parent must notify his or her employer in writing as soon as is reasonably practicable but no later than four weeks before the commencement of such leave of their intention to take shared leave.

Public Service Superannuation (Age of Retirement) Bill 2018

This Bill proposes to raise the age at which certain public servants are required to retire from their employment. The mandatory retirement age applicable to public servants will be 70 years of age. The Bill also proposes that the Minister for Public Expenditure and Reform may prescribe a higher age of 75 to apply as a mandatory retirement age, having had regard to factors including the likely effect on recruitment, promotion and retention of staff in the public service, the pensionable age applicable at the time of the order and the likely cost (if any) to the Exchequer. This Bill will apply to all public servants, with specified exclusions.
